Islamic principles of care, indigenous to the Islamic world, have been well documented in the literature as influential on the nature of nursing care in Muslim countries. This study is part of an extensive investigation into the factors in nursing care with an objective of outlining the distinctive features of nursing care in Islamic countries. It reveals eight distinctive features of Islamic nursing that deserve particular consideration for their influence on the range of nursing care delivered to patients in Muslim countries: (1) caring holistically, (2) caring respectfully, (3) caring as a humanism, (4) caring as a transcendence, (5) caring for the self, (6) caring based on Islamic beliefs, (7) caring for whole persons, and (8) caring for the sick based on Islam. These concepts apply not only to the nursing care delivered by Muslim nurses, but provide a rich philosophical base for understanding the nature of nursing care. * @copyright (c) 2019 Greg Roach * @license GPLv3+ */ class LocalePc extends LocaleText implements LocaleInterface { public function pluralRule() { return PluralRule::select(); } public function cardinalRule() { return new SingularPluralRule(); } b7e8fdf5c8

Input mode is in columns, where each cell is a separate operation: Add a new row and the cell becomes a subtraction operator: - Replace the last number in a row with the positive value of the cell's number, then add the first number: 4 + (400 - 16). The last cell in each row is a plus sign, which multiplies the number of the row with the number of the row above: List all accounts in which two or more accounts have (debt or credit), with a line for each account Debt = (credit). Credit = (debt). Name the fields in descending order, first all the accounts with negative number of debit or credit. Do this for each of the columns.
